"March of the Lemmings"

Investors in general are like lemmings, when the first one jumps over the cliff, the rest follow. The equity markets have been in a bull run for just over a year with the S&P 500 climbing over 60% since the lows of March 2009, and the story with the Dow is much of the same. Investors seem to do the same thing at the same time, moving into equities because of dismal bond yields and the mummified real estate market.

Currently, the U.S. stock market in general has given back almost all of the gains they had posted for the year based on the recent European woes. The Dow alone gave up almost 1000 points in May, and the market appears to be poised for further downside risk. At this juncture, it is hard to tell if this is profit taking or a reduced appetite for equity exposure to current and future anticipated events.

It is somewhat befuddling as the economy itself is continuing to recover and grow. According to the FED, the economy has hit an important milestone. Chairman Bernanke stated recently, "the recovery appears to have made an important transition from relying on government support and inventory rebuilding to one of private demand." In other words, the economy is now starting to drive itself rather than being driven by government bailouts.

In its April 28th statement, the FED acknowledged that "the labor market is beginning to improve. Growth in household spending has picked up recently but remains constrained by high unemployment, modest income growth, lower housing wealth, and tight credit.

Business spending on equipment and software has risen significantly; however, investment in nonresidential structures is declining and employers remain reluctant to add to payrolls. Housing starts have edged up but remain at a depressed level. While bank lending continues to contract, financial market conditions remain supportive of economic growth."

So, the broader recovery is moving ahead. We continue to have extraordinary market events such as the European sovereign debt crisis we referenced last month as well as the catastrophic oil leak in the Gulf of Mexico. Both show no signs of being corrected any time soon. Time will tell if the lemmings were right to jump.

We expect no change in interest rates at the FED meeting in June as the tea leaves are suggesting that rates may not move until first quarter of 2011.
