"Mixed March"

Well, here we are at the end of the raising the possibility of further stimulus by 1st quarter, and it seems there is no clear the Fed, only to place our economy back on direction for the economy as some of the life support. In addition, let's not forget, indicators continue to be mixed, partially related to a much warmer winter across the U.S. Our stock market, on the other hand, has seen its best returns for the first three months since the late 1990's.

The Fed met at its regularly scheduled meeting of March 13th and said nothing we were not expecting to hear. They stated, "risk on" trade. Let's face it, Americans tend "The unemployment rate has declined notably in recent months but remains elevated. Household spending and business fixed investment have continued to advance. The housing sector remains depressed. Inflation has been subdued in recent months, although prices of crude oil and gasoline have increased lately. The recent increase in oil and gasoline prices will push up inflation temporarily."

The economy is slowly moving in the right direction but if you read the tea leaves in the Fed's statements, there is much room for downside risk, and, the massive budget deficit and national debt still needs to be addressed. Most of the recent euphoria is due to positive unemployment numbers, however, if they falter, it could derail the momentum in the stock market and cause a flight to safety in bonds. This has happened in the last few days, thus further

The last action they took, Operation Twist, is set to expire in June. The latest news we have been reading suggests that market watchers are looking for another rendition in an effort to keep rates lower longer, and to continue to push investors into the to feel better if they have a job, their 401k or retirement plan statements don't show implosion, and they can continue to finance purchase of real estate at historic lows. It's all chases of real estate at historic lows. It's all related and feeds into our confidence as consumers and psyche as to how we feel about the economy as a whole.

We will continue to read the economic tea leaves and watch closely as the next few months worth of economic data will be very telling of whether we see the green shoots of a lasting spring or crab grass growing in the garden. Our hope is for a modest and sustainable recovery so that markets can react reasonably and so we can invest our depositors' funds accordingly.
