"House of Cards"

The City of San Bernardino marks the third California city to file for the protection of Chapter 9 municipal bankruptcy this year. In the past two months, the cities of Mammoth Lakes and Stockton have filed as well, with Stockton becoming the largest U.S. city to do so.

San Bernardino cited some of the reasons for which it filed including plummeting assessed valuations due to the housing crisis as well as sales tax revenue declines. In 2008, the general fund topped $133 million in revenue. This fiscal year it's $120 million and expenses of $166.2 million, so it's no wonder why with a $46 million gap that they've garnered the headlines.

The city has about $56 million of general fund indebtedness, as well as several hundred million in unfunded liabilities, including payments on a $50 million pension obligation bonds (POB), $195 million in unfunded pension obligations, $61 million in unfunded retiree healthcare (OPEB), and $40 million of workers compensation, in all totaling almost $1 billion in liabilities.

With more municipal bankruptcy filings likely, the financial pain to local governments is showing no signs of subsiding; to the contrary, it seems to be intensifying. Cities such as Duarte, Oakland, Pomona, Fairfield and even the mega city of Los Angeles are all experiencing similar issues with debt and unfunded liabilities.

These California cities in bankruptcy as well as others in financial crisis mode will be closely watched by municipal bond investors as they will be the test cases of whether cities in financial trouble will be allowed to default on their bond debt and pension obligations, or, be held accountable for the debt they incurred.

At its most recent meeting, the FED stated it may be prepared to take further action at future meetings depending on economic data, with employment numbers being the main driver. With the EuroZone, Libor-Gate and our own "CaliZone" problems, we continue to see an extended period of low interest rates further impacting individual and institutional investors alike.
