"Volatility & the Return of the Russian Bear"

The first quarter of this year has started out with an increase in market volatility with large swings in both equity and bond prices; several catalysts include profit taking from the massive gains of 2013 and the statistical realization that the same performance isn't likely this year. Also, talk of slower growth in China, a geopolitical crisis heating up in Eastern Europe between Ukraine and Russia, and a more hawkish FED with its recent QE reduction and rate talk has weighed on the markets. The ongoing concern among investors is whether the FED will be able to successfully engineer the withdrawal from current quantitative easing policies without disrupting their two primary goals of keeping prices stable and unemployment low.

Sworn in on February 3rd was the Federal Reserve's first Chairwoman in history, Janet Yellen. It didn't take long for the power of the spoken words of a FED head to come to light after a flubbed comment at the March 19th FOMC meeting spooked the markets. Investors were caught off guard as to the reference of the timing of rate increases, but has since been rectified by tying the tightening to a broader range of economic data rather than just inflation and 6.5% unemployment (or better) as the primary driver for FED action.

She definitely has her hands full as the slow U.S. economic recovery converges with the $10 billion per month taper and the talk of increasing short-term rates, namely fed funds and the discount rate. At a recent speech in Washington D.C., she remarked that many people still feel that the economy is in recession because they have yet to see improvement in their own employment and income situations. The sluggish speed of improvement in the employment numbers is evident in a variety of areas, including the large number of long-term unemployed and the much higher than usual number of folks working part time that would like full time employment.

Yellen also stated "For the many reasons I have noted today, I think this extraordinary commitment is still needed and will be for some time, and I believe that view is widely shared by my fellow policy makers at the FED." Yellen made it very clear that they remain committed to providing extraordinary support for the economy for some time to come. However, she left the door open to a gradual tightening by stating, "In this context, recent steps by the FED to reduce the rate of new securities purchases are not a lessening of this commitment, only a judgment that recent progress in the labor market means our aid for the recovery need not grow as quickly."

Clearly, the next three quarters of this year will be a challenge for the markets; stocks will react to bonds and will see sector rotation, and bonds will react to FED speak, headlines of Russian invasions and the possibility of a NATO response, as well as the politics of U.S. mid-term elections. Folks, volatility is here to stay for a while, but will present opportunities for the TPIF and individual investors alike. We'll continue to monitor our dynamic markets and invest accordingly.
