the Western Riverside Council of Governments (WRCOG) sub-region and the portion of the unincorporated County not within either of the two sub-region boundaries. Underlying these forecasts is a working data set consisting of 1,806 Traffic Analysis Zones and 2,079 split Traffic Analysis Zones. RCP-10 was produced by the Riverside County Center for Demographic Research with cooperation from the Cities, CVAG, WRCOG and the County's Planning Department.

The primary objective of RCP-10 is to provide input to SCAG's 2012 Regional Transportation Plan, the 2012 Regional Housing Needs Assessment and for planning efforts undertaken by County departments. The CVAG Executive Committee and the WRCOG Executive Committee approved the forecast that coincides with the area and jurisdictions they respectively represent on June 7, 2010.

The portions of the RCP-10 forecasts that have been approved by CVAG and WRCOG for use in regional planning efforts do not include the approximate 2,840 square miles of land in Unincorporated Riverside County, not within the coverage of either CVAG or WRCOG. Approval of the RCP-10 by the Board will ensure that there is local government endorsement for all areas of Riverside County. Approval of RCP-10 by the Board of Supervisors is also requested in order to encourage County Departments to use these forecasts in their planning efforts and to support the actions that have been taken by both CVAG and WRCOG.

The forecast includes some interesting findings. Despite the "great recession" of 2008-2010, Riverside County did continue to add population. Natural increase (births minus deaths) has accounted for approximately 20,000 new persons annually, while immigration accounted for 7,000 to 8,000 annually. These two components of growth were not affected by the recession.

Domestic migration, primarily migration of persons from Los Angeles, Orange and San Diego counties, fell off from a net of nearly 60,000 persons during the peak years of 2003-2006, to just over 3,000 in 2008-2009. Domestic migration from these areas will again drive population growth when the economy fully recovers.

While Riverside County is projected to meet the majority of the regional demand for single-family detached housing and employment will rebound as jobs are created to meet the needs of the growing population, the recession will have an impact on county growth. The RCP-10 population, housing and employment forecasts are all lower than the respective Riverside County Projections 2006 forecasts, adopted by your Honorable Board in March 2006. Specifically, the RCP-10 population forecast for 2035 has been reduced by approximately 200,000 people, the housing forecast has dropped by 80,000 housing units and the employment forecast is 130,000 less.
